The army is not idle. New regiments are receiving in-structions necessary to perfect them as soldiers, for, though their elen and dash in the great battle were everywhere referred to with admiration, it is not the less true that they were not equal to the trying positions in which they were sometimes placed by emergencies of the fight.
The army, moreover, is not still. Large columns were

No one seems likely to enter the field against Forrest the present State Prison Inspector, whose large vote the last election will probably secure a renomination.

A Double Congressional Convention.

Synacus, Sept. 23, 1862.

The Convention to elect delegates to the Republicar Congressional Convention for the First district, held to day, resulted in the choice of two chairmen amidst great confusion, and two sets of delegates. The question turned on who had the right to call the Convention to order. The delegates are divided between Leavenworth and Sedgwick.

Our informant was upon the ground and saw the whole transaction.

Ou Saturday night about one o'clock, the rebeis, eleven regiments strong, under Gen. Chalmers, appeared in front of the fortineations and sent to a flag of truce demanding a surrender. Col. Wilder replied that his business was to hold the place, and he should do so until whiped out.

As soon as it was light the robels opened on the works with artillery, from the heights on the south with five pieces and from the north with two mountain howitzers. The guns from the works—four in number—replied with terrible effect, silencing all the rebeis' guns but three after some two hours.

Being foiled in their attempt to shell out the works, the rebeis threw out their whole available infantry force against the whole line of works, and were repulsed with terrible loss five successive times, and finally wither v, sending back a flag of truce for permission to bury the dead, which was granted. In this fight our less in kind and wounded was thirty-three. The rebels admit a 1-2 of seven hundred.

Again, on Tuesday morning, the rebels appeared on 1-2 south side of the river, and made demonstrations as if to renew the onset, driving in our pickete at about hadpast nine A. M., sending forward sharpshooters, sud firing an occasional shell into the works. Our forces rapiled at intervals, reserving the fire, except when there is not there or more hours, when Col. Dunham, growing tired of fighting without any result on either side, sent out three or four companies, from the Fiftieth and Sixtieth Indiana as skirmishers, to draw them up, but to no effect, and at about five F. M. the firing ceased on both sides, without any serious results to either side, only some two of our skirmishers being killed.

The result showed that the demonstration on Tuesday was only designed to attract the attention of Colonel Bunham, while a heavy column of Bragg's forces crossed Green river above, and moving down, socured the heights on the north, which sfectually commanded the works, which colonels Duilham and Wilder both acted most gal-lantly, and deserve the commendation of all. Most cer-tainly no better fight has been made during the war than that by Colonel Wilder on Sunday; and on Monday Col. D. was everywhere in the thickest of the fight, giving di-rection to the movements with the utmost coolness and courage. Perfect good feeling and harmony existed be-tween the two, and no rivalry or disagreement, as has been intimated.

Buckner and Forrest were with Bragg's column, and are now at Munfordville, unless Buell has bagged them.
